

The Annals of the Ashen Era

House Morvain

Faction Classification: noble house Seat: Ironfell Citadel Doctrine: Ancient noble dynasty claiming descent from the last Sunder-Kings.

House Morvain is an ancient noble house whose authority rests upon a dynastic claim and the weight of its antiquity. It claims descent from the last Sunder-Kings, a lineage asserted as the foundation of its legitimacy. This claim is not presented as a secondary ornament to its rule; it is the central doctrine by which the house defines its station and expects recognition.

Category	Codex Record
Faction	House Morvain
Org kind	noble house
Doctrine	Ancient noble dynasty claiming descent from the last Sunder-Kings.
Seat	House Morvain seated at Ironfell Citadel
Belligerence	House Morvain belligerent in The War of Endless Vigil
Belligerence	House Morvain belligerent in The Purge of Blackport

The house is seated at Ironfell Citadel. Its seat, identity, and conduct conform to an aristocratic and kingly presentation shaped by its claimed descent from the Sunder-Kings. Ceremonial display, heraldic emphasis, and formal address are treated as instruments of continuity rather than mere decoration. The house’s antiquity is itself a political resource.

House Morvain carries itself with ancestral pride and a guarded sense of entitlement. Its representatives are characterized by restraint, formal reserve, and an expectation that precedence should be acknowledged. Such conduct reflects the house’s view of itself as an enduring dynasty rather than a temporary claimant among the powers of the Ashen Era.

The record identifies House Morvain as belligerent in The War of Endless Vigil. The record also identifies House Morvain as belligerent in The Purge of Blackport. These entries establish the house’s participation as a belligerent in both conflicts; they do not, in this entry, define the full causes, operations, or outcomes of either.

House Morvain’s standing therefore derives from three mutually reinforcing assertions: noble status, descent from the last Sunder-Kings, and the accumulated authority of antiquity. Its posture remains kingly in appearance, dynastic in doctrine, and guarded in demeanor. The house’s claim is the basis upon which it presents its right to regard itself as a principal power.

Plate - The Accord of Mournthrone: consult the plate for the recorded figures.

The Accord of Mournthrone

Classification: Conflict Beginning: 297 AS Ending: 301 AS Victor: The Ashen Vanguard Recorded outcome: Collapsed into a decade of guerrilla reprisals

The Accord of Mournthrone began in 297 AS and ended in 301 AS with The Ashen Vanguard named victor. The title is retained in the annals despite the accord’s failure to produce a durable settlement. Its visual identity is that of a broken accord overshadowed by Mournthrone and The Ashen Vanguard. Its demeanor is less that of a settled victory than a sullen prelude to reprisal.

The principal recorded actions are as follows:

Year	Place	Record
297 AS	Crookvale	The Accord of Mournthrone waged at Crookvale.
298 AS	Fenspire	The Accord of Mournthrone devastated Fenspire.

301 AS	Hollowvale	The Accord of Mournthrone devastated Hollowvale.
301 AS	Vharencrag Fortress	The Accord of Mournthrone waged at Vharencrag Fortress.

These entries do not describe a continuous advance or a conclusive pacification. They establish the geographic record of the conflict and the visible damage associated with its progress. The devastation of Fenspire and Hollowvale remains attached to the conflict's formal chronology; the actions at Crookvale and Vharencrag Fortress remain attached to its military record.

The declared result was victory for The Ashen Vanguard. The actual result was less stable. The Accord of Mournthrone collapsed into a decade of guerrilla reprisals, preserving the conflict in dispersed violence after its formal ending. Accordingly, the designation of victor does not constitute proof of complete control, reconciliation, or lasting submission.

The concealed record gives the conflict a second interpretation. The secret truth is that the losing commander was bribed to withdraw. This fact alters the apparent meaning of the final result without removing The Ashen Vanguard's status as victor. The withdrawal is therefore catalogued as a concealed cause of collapse rather than as a separate engagement.

The numbered plate accompanying this entry preserves the recorded figures. Consult the plate for those figures; they are not reproduced here. For purposes of the annals, the essential determination remains unchanged: The Accord of Mournthrone began in 297 AS, ended in 301 AS, named The Ashen Vanguard victor, and left a decade of guerrilla reprisals in its wake.

The Ashen Vanguard

The Ashen Vanguard is a knightly order sworn to contain the Ley-ruins left by the Sundering. Its doctrine is not custodial in the passive sense. It defines containment as an active military obligation, requiring militant discipline, controlled force, and uninterrupted vigilance wherever dangerous remnants persist.

Register	Recorded designation
Faction	The Ashen Vanguard
Org kind	knightly order
Doctrine	Militant order sworn to contain the Ley-ruins left by the Sundering
Seat	Vharenford
Disposition	Severe, disciplined, constantly watchful
Recorded belligerencies	The War of Drowned Light; The Accord of Mournthrone; The Leaden Accord
Recorded outcome	Victor of The Accord of Mournthrone

The Ashen Vanguard is seated at Vharenford. This seat is the principal point from which its order is identified in surviving registers. No distinction is made in those registers between its administrative authority and its military purpose: both are subordinated to the containment of the Ley-ruins.

Its visual identity is that of a militant, knightly order marked by the grim legacy of the Ley-ruins. Equipment, bearing, and ceremony are consequently treated as instruments of warning as much as instruments of war. The order presents no softened interpretation of its charge. Its appearance communicates the hazards it confronts and the severity with which it addresses them.

The Vanguard’s demeanor is severe, disciplined, and constantly watchful. Individual conduct is expected to reflect the order’s collective doctrine. Uncertainty, negligence, and uncontrolled contact with dangerous remnants are incompatible with its stated purpose. The order therefore maintains a posture of readiness even when no engagement is recorded.

The Ashen Vanguard was belligerent in The War of Drowned Light. It was also belligerent in The Accord of Mournthrone, where The Ashen Vanguard is recorded as victor. The order was further belligerent in The Leaden Accord. These entries establish its recurring presence in the military record without altering its primary classification as a knightly order.

In all formal descriptions, the central fact remains unchanged: The Ashen Vanguard is a militant order sworn to contain the Ley-ruins left by the Sundering. Its authority derives from that oath, its appearance bears the mark of that duty, and its conduct is governed by the discipline required to enforce it. Vharenford remains the seat by which the order is located in the annals.

The Bleeding Crown

Identification

The Bleeding Crown is a royalist remnant fighting to restore the shattered monarchy. Its cause is defined by loyalty to the monarchy and opposition to the realm's fractured condition. It does not recognize the shattered condition of the realm as a legitimate settlement. Its stated purpose is restoration rather than accommodation.

The Bleeding Crown is seated at Blackford. This seat constitutes its established center of authority and the principal location from which its royalist claim is maintained.

Doctrine and Temperament

Designation	Record
Faction	The Bleeding Crown
Org kind	royalist remnant
Doctrine	Royalist remnant fighting to restore the shattered monarchy.
Seat	Blackford
Demeanor	Fervent, embittered, and determined

The faction's loyalty is directed toward the monarchy as an institution, not toward the realm's present divisions. Its opposition to the fractured condition of the realm informs its rhetoric, recruitment, and conduct. In practice, the distinction between restoration and reprisal is frequently narrow.

The Bleeding Crown is fervent in declaration and embittered by the monarchy's shattering. It is determined in pursuit of restoration. These qualities are not ornamental descriptions; they are recognized characteristics of the faction's public bearing and internal discipline.

Heraldic Aspect

Its visual identity is royalist and wounded, evoking a crown that has endured the shattering of the monarchy. Crown forms, damaged regalia, and marks of fracture are consistent with this presentation. The symbolism presents survival as proof of rightful endurance. It does not depict an unbroken crown. The wound is retained as evidence, warning, and claim.

Recorded Belligerence

The Bleeding Crown was a belligerent in The War of Endless Vigil and is recorded as its victor. The record establishes both its participation and its victory; it does not diminish the faction's character as a remnant. Its success in that war is used by the faction as confirmation that the royalist cause remains capable of prevailing.

The Bleeding Crown was also a belligerent in The Accord of Mournthrone. This designation records its presence as a party to that accord's belligerent order. No broader conclusion is entered here regarding the accord's settlement or subsequent force.

Assessment

The Bleeding Crown remains defined by restoration, monarchy, and resistance to fragmentation. Its authority is royalist in origin, wounded in appearance, and fervent, embittered, and determined in demeanor. Codex classification: royalist remnant.

The Iron-Ring Cartel

The Iron-Ring Cartel is a merchant cartel seated at Hollowreach. Its doctrine is recorded as follows:

> The Iron-Ring Cartel – doctrine: Mercantile league running contraband through the ruined trade roads.

The Cartel is a mercantile league organized around commerce conducted across the remnants of the realm’s trade routes. Its operations concern the movement, exchange, and concealment of contraband through roads damaged or abandoned after the Sundering. The organization’s structure is consequently commercial rather than feudal, with authority expressed through control of trade, access, and passage.

Its visual identity is mercantile and hard-edged. Iron, sealed cargo, marked ledgers, guarded wagons, and reinforced trade gear are consistent with its cartel structure and contraband trade. These signs are not ornamental. They indicate a faction whose public identity is inseparable from the practical demands of commerce conducted beyond lawful channels.

The Cartel’s demeanor is calculating and practical. It is comfortable operating beyond lawful trade and does not present illegality as a moral distinction requiring explanation. Decisions are assessed by utility, risk, access, and return. Negotiation is therefore treated as an instrument of commerce rather than a display of trust.

Recorded Belligerencies and Victories

Conflict	Recorded status of The Iron-Ring Cartel
The Winter Reckoning	The Iron-Ring Cartel belligerent in The Winter Reckoning; The Iron-Ring Cartel victor of The Winter Reckoning
The Purge of Blackport	The Iron-Ring Cartel belligerent in The Purge of Blackport; The Iron-Ring Cartel victor of The Purge of Blackport
The Leaden Accord	The Iron-Ring Cartel belligerent in The Leaden Accord; The Iron-Ring Cartel victor of The Leaden Accord

These records establish the Cartel as a recurring participant in the armed and political contests of the Ashen Era. They do not alter its primary classification. The Iron-Ring Cartel remains a merchant cartel, and its stated doctrine remains the operation of a mercantile league running contraband through the ruined trade roads.

At Hollowreach, its seated authority is understood through this same commercial logic. The Cartel’s presence is defined by transaction, movement, and controlled access. Its hard-edged appearance and calculating demeanor are functional expressions of its organization, not separate traditions. The faction's conduct beyond lawful trade is therefore consistent with its doctrine, its structure, and its established record as belligerent and victor.

The Leaden Accord

Classification: Conflict Beginning: 330 AS End: 342 AS Recorded casualty figure: 14011 Named victor: The Iron-Ring Cartel

The Leaden Accord was a prolonged military contest whose surviving record is defined less by conquest than by erasure. Its duration began in 330 AS and ended in 342 AS. The accepted outcome names The Iron-Ring Cartel as victor. This designation remains official despite the final destruction suffered by both opposing hosts.

Recorded site	Year	Assessment
Greyfell Citadel	337 AS	Devastated by The Leaden Accord
Palewell Abbey	338 AS	Devastated by The Leaden Accord
Cindermere Hold	338 AS	Devastated by The Leaden Accord
Vharencrag Fortress	341 AS	The Leaden Accord waged there

The Leaden Accord ended when both hosts were destroyed by a Ley-storm. The event rendered the declaration of victory administratively useful but militarily hollow. The recorded casualty figure is 14011. No surviving account establishes the final disposition of every combatant, and the visible remains support only the conclusion that mutual ruin followed the last engagement.

The principal contradiction lies in the artifact associated with the conflict. Public accounts state that it was destroyed. The hidden truth is that a supposedly destroyed artifact was in fact spirited away. Its absence is therefore treated as evidence of concealment rather than confirmation of destruction. The identity and present custody of the artifact are not established in this entry.

The Leaden Accord's visual identity is leaden, storm-riven, and haunted by the absence of a supposedly destroyed artifact. Surviving depictions favor dim metal, fractured skies, vacant reliquaries, and structures reduced to inert silhouettes. These conventions do not signify a single battlefield; they signify the conflict's condition of incomplete closure.

Its demeanor is the bleak stillness of mutual ruin concealed beneath a declared victory. This distinction is preserved in formal annotations: victory belongs to The Iron-Ring Cartel, while the hosts themselves were destroyed by a Ley-storm. The declaration and the destruction are both canonical, but they do not describe the same kind of success.

The devastation of Greyfell Citadel in 337 AS, Palewell Abbey in 338 AS, and Cindermere Hold in 338 AS marks the conflict's destructive record. The engagement at Vharencrag Fortress in 341 AS stands as its last specifically recorded site before the ending in 342 AS.

The Purge of Blackport

Classification: Conflict Period: 311 AS–321 AS Victor: The Iron-Ring Cartel Casualties: 70907 Outcome: Ended with the total rout of the aggressors

The Purge of Blackport began in 311 AS and ended in 321 AS. It caused 70907 casualties and ended with the total rout of the aggressors. The Iron-Ring Cartel emerged as victor.

The conflict’s recorded scope includes two designated theatres of devastation:

Record	Entry
Blackport	Subject to the purge
Fenspire	The Purge of Blackport waged at Fenspire (in 319 AS)
Gloamreach	The Purge of Blackport devastated Gloamreach (in 320 AS)

The official settlement attributes victory to The Iron-Ring Cartel and treats the rout of the aggressors as the conclusive military result. The record is therefore commonly cited as a model of merciless triumph: decisive, comprehensive, and without mitigation.

A concealed truth alters that judgment. The victors poisoned the wells of their own allies. This act is not presented as a secondary accident or an incidental contamination. It is the hidden instrument by which the apparent triumph must be understood. The same force that secured victory imposed ruin upon those aligned with it.

The Purge of Blackport has consequently retained two simultaneous classifications in the annals. Publicly, it is a victorious campaign ending in the total rout of the aggressors. In restricted accounts, it is a calculated betrayal concealed beneath the language of victory. The distinction is material: the casualty figure records the scale of the conflict, but does not by itself disclose the method used by the victors.

Appearance: Blackport under purge, marked by The Iron-Ring Cartel and poisoned water.

Demeanor: Merciless triumph soured by calculated betrayal.

The conflict’s enduring emblem is thus not the routed aggressor, nor the Cartel’s undisputed victory alone, but poisoned water within a victorious domain. Its records remain serviceable for determining dates, theatres, casualties, and outcome. They are less reliable when used to describe the moral character of the victory.

The Silent Choir

Classification	Record
Faction	The Silent Choir
The Silent Choir - org kind	priesthood
The Silent Choir - doctrine	Secretive priesthood that records, censors, and rewrites history.
Seat	The Silent Choir seated at Vharencrag Fortress
The War of Drowned Light	The Silent Choir belligerent in The War of Drowned Light; The Silent Choir victor of The War of Drowned Light
The War of Endless Vigil	The Silent Choir belligerent in The War of Endless Vigil
The Winter Reckoning	The Silent Choir belligerent in The Winter Reckoning

Office and Authority

The Silent Choir is a secretive priesthood whose religious authority is exercised through control of the historical record. Its doctrine assigns record, correction, suppression, and revision to a single sacred function. History is therefore not treated as a fixed inheritance. It is maintained as an instrument of order, subject to examination and alteration by the Choir.

The Silent Choir records history. It censors history. It rewrites history. These duties are not separate offices in the known account of the faction, but expressions of one doctrine. The Choir's authority rests upon possession of the accepted version of events and upon the restriction of competing versions.

The Silent Choir is seated at Vharencrag Fortress. Its seat is associated with restrained religious practice, controlled access, and the keeping of records. The visual identity of The Silent Choir is priestly, restrained, and defined by secrecy and the keeping of records. Its appearance communicates neither pageantry nor open force. It presents the discipline of custody.

Conduct

The Choir is quiet, inscrutable, and deliberate in its handling of truth. Statements are measured. Omissions are consequential. Disclosure is treated as an act requiring the same care as inscription. The faction's silence is therefore not an absence of policy; it is a method of policy.

Its custodians maintain a severe distinction between what may be preserved, what may be concealed, and what may be rewritten. The distinction is administered through religious authority rather than public consent. For this reason, the Choir's records possess both archival and doctrinal weight.

War Register

The Silent Choir was belligerent in The War of Drowned Light and was victor of The War of Drowned Light. The Silent Choir was belligerent in The War of Endless Vigil. The Silent Choir was belligerent in The Winter Reckoning.

No general account of these belligerencies is entered here beyond the stated record. The Choir's own handling of the historical record remains a material consideration in all surviving accounts. Its victory in The War of Drowned Light is therefore recorded as an established factional result, while the form and interpretation of that result remain subject to the Choir's doctrine.

The War of Drowned Light

Classification: Conflict Period: 225 AS–235 AS Casualties: 64617
Recorded victor: The Silent Choir Outcome: Collapsed into a decade of guerrilla reprisals

The War of Drowned Light began in 225 AS and ended in 235 AS. Its duration is recorded without qualification, though the violence associated with it did not resolve into a clean termination. The War of Drowned Light collapsed into a decade of guerrilla reprisals, and its conclusion therefore signifies the end of the principal war rather than the restoration of settled order.

The conflict’s recorded casualty figure is 64617. This figure is preserved in the annals as the accepted total for the war. The surviving record does not treat the number as evidence of a decisive engagement or a single catastrophic event. Instead, it belongs to a campaign remembered for attrition, concealed operations, reprisals, and the persistence of violence after formal hostilities had ended.

Year	Recorded occurrence
225 AS	The War of Drowned Light began.
227 AS	The War of Drowned Light devastated Gloamreach .
228 AS	The War of Drowned Light waged at Cindermere Hold .
233 AS	The War of Drowned Light waged at Greyfell Citadel .
235 AS	The War of Drowned Light ended.

The War of Drowned Light victor was The Silent Choir. This designation remains the formal outcome in the principal annalistic tradition. A separate concealed record states that the spark that started it was staged by The Silent Choir. The victory and the secret staging are therefore entered together, though the latter was not presented as public cause during the conflict.

Its visual identity is one of drowned radiance, broken banners, and a war remembered through reprisals rather than triumph. Records concerning its battlefields frequently emphasize obscured light, damaged standards, and the absence of ceremonial closure. These features are classificatory rather than decorative: they distinguish the conflict from wars whose memory is organized around conquest or formal settlement.

Its demeanor is marked by concealed treachery, attrition, and unresolved vengeance. The designation applies both to the war itself and to its aftermath. The decade of guerrilla reprisals remains the principal reason the conflict is not treated as concluded in the conventional sense of victory, surrender, or reconciliation.

The War of Endless Vigil

Classification: Conflict Period: 247 AS–251 AS Recorded victor: The Bleeding Crown Casualty figure: 81577

The War of Endless Vigil began in 247 AS and ended in 251 AS. Its recorded conclusion was the total rout of the aggressors. The Bleeding Crown is recorded as the victor.

The conflict imposed severe destruction across the contested territories. The War of Endless Vigil devastated Crookvale in 249 AS. It devastated Thorncairn in 250 AS. The War of Endless Vigil was waged at Hollowreach in 251 AS.

Register	Record
Conflict	The War of Endless Vigil
Beginning	247 AS
Ending	251 AS
Casualties	81577
Outcome	Ended with the total rout of the aggressors
Victor	The Bleeding Crown
Secret truth	The losing commander was bribed to withdraw
Recorded sites	Crookvale; Hollowreach; Thorncairn

Operational Character

The war’s visual identity is one of blood-marked watchfulness, exhausted armies, and an enemy line breaking under prolonged vigilance. Its imagery is therefore defined less by sudden triumph than by the persistence of forces that remain at their stations until opposition fails.

The conflict feels brutal and decisive on the surface. Its recorded outcome supports that appearance: the aggressors were totally routed, and The Bleeding Crown received the formal victory. This conclusion is not, however, a complete account of the war’s conduct.

Concealed Determinant

The secret truth of the War of Endless Vigil is that the losing commander was bribed to withdraw. The withdrawal remains the concealed determinant behind the apparent final collapse. Accordingly, the war is classified as both a decisive rout and a corrupted victory.

This distinction is preserved in the annals without altering the official result. The Bleeding Crown remains the recorded victor. The total rout of the aggressors remains the recorded outcome. The hidden payment does not nullify either entry; it qualifies the means by which the conclusion was reached.

The casualty figure is recorded as 81577. The devastation of Crookvale, the devastation of Thorncairn, and the fighting at Hollowreach establish the war's material imprint across its listed sites. Together with the concealed bribery, these records define the conflict as an episode of prolonged vigilance, exhaustion, betrayal, and final collapse.

The Winter Reckoning

Classification: Conflict Period: 270 AS–283 AS Victor: The Iron-Ring Cartel Casualty figure: 27987

The Winter Reckoning began in 270 AS and ended in 283 AS. Its duration is recorded without interruption in the surviving annals, though the record of its final settlement remains materially incomplete. The conflict left 27987 casualties and concluded with The Iron-Ring Cartel identified as victor.

Its outcome was decided by a betrayal at the eleventh hour. This determination is accepted by the principal accounts, despite their disagreement concerning the identity and scope of the treachery. The concealed truth is that the victors poisoned the wells of their own allies. This fact is preserved in restricted testimony and is not treated as a battlefield rumor.

Recorded site	Year	Register
Stormmarch	276 AS	The Winter Reckoning waged at Stormmarch (in 276 AS)
Gloammarch	277 AS	The Winter Reckoning waged at Gloammarch (in 277 AS)
Cindermere Hold	271 AS	The Winter Reckoning devastated Cindermere Hold (in 271 AS)
Marrowwell Abbey	277 AS	The Winter Reckoning devastated Marrowwell Abbey (in 277 AS)

The documented sites indicate a conflict marked by movement through exposed winter ground, fortified holdings, and contested sources of water. No single surviving account establishes the full sequence of engagements. The destruction of Cindermere Hold and Marrowwell Abbey is nevertheless entered as a direct consequence of the conflict’s passage.

Its visual identity is one of winter, betrayal, and the iron mark of the Iron-Ring Cartel. Frost, ash, sealed wells, and the Cartel’s iron insignia recur in surviving depictions. These motifs are conventional representations and do not alter the recorded findings.

The Winter Reckoning carries an atmosphere of calculated treachery and poisoned victory. Its conclusion is therefore classified as a strategic success with concealed internal betrayal. The Iron-Ring Cartel remains the victor in the official reckoning; the poisoning of the wells of their own allies remains the concealed truth governing later interpretation.
