

Catalogue of the Ashreach Sale

A Marsh-Holding Offered Under Seal, with Conditions of Contest

> To all creditors, claimants, captains, and persons of sound enough judgment to bid: > Let it be known that Ashreach is presented for auction—not as a jewel, nor as a refuge, but as a defended holding in a country where water remembers every footprint. > —From the hand of the appointed catalogue-keeper

The Holding Entire

Ashreach lies in The Weeping Marshes and is currently contested. Its garrison numbers 2598, making it a defended but unsettled holding rather than a core stronghold.

The prudent bidder will read those words twice.

The walls—where wall may be distinguished from bank, bank from ruin, and ruin from drowned foundation—are offered with the settlement. So too the perpetual burden of watchfulness. Ashreach presents the bleak, marsh-bound aspect of a settlement caught between ash and water. Its atmosphere is tense, unstable, and perpetually threatened.

No claim is made here that the holding is peaceful. No claim is made that it is safe. The catalogue merely records that it stands, and that standing in The Weeping Marshes is itself a form of defiance.

Lot A — The Ashen Ground

An extent of blackened earth and wet margin, suitable to those who prefer their inheritance difficult to reach and more difficult to keep. Mist is included without surcharge. The mud is deep, the air close, and the horizon frequently unwilling to appear.

The lot is offered as part of Ashreach and may not be separated from its unsettled condition.

Lot B — The Garrison

The garrison numbers 2598.

Arms, discipline, loyalties, and appetites are not warranted by this catalogue. The catalogue-keeper records only the number and leaves the buyer to discover what manner of defense is purchased with it.

A defended holding is not thereby a secure holding. Any clerk who says otherwise has never slept beneath a roof while the marsh whispered against the door.

Lot C — The Claim

Ashreach is offered amid the broader contention over the ruins by The Ashen Vanguard, House Morvain, the Silent Choir, the Iron-Ring Cartel, and the Bleeding Crown.

Their interest, if interest it be, is not represented as consent, surrender, or absence. The holding remains currently contested, and bidders are advised that ink has less weight than steel when both are set upon the same boundary.

Final Notice

Ashreach is not sold as a core stronghold. It is sold as a defended but unsettled holding: bleak, marsh-bound, caught between ash and water, tense, unstable, and perpetually threatened.

Bids shall be spoken plainly.

The marsh has little patience for mumbling.
