

Decree of the Ash-Sealed Marches Concerning Sabelle Blackspire, Thessaly Coldwater, Vharencrag Fortress, and Emberdeep

Let this writing be read beneath the watchfires and entered into every service-book that still has room for truth.

Sabelle Blackspire, born in 341 AS, is hereby recognized in this decree by her office alone:

Quartermaster. No canonical physical features are established for Sabelle Blackspire, and no canonical temperament is established for her. Let no clerk invent a face, a voice, or a disposition where the rolls provide none. Her measure is the keeping of stores, the counting of what remains, and the stern arithmetic by which hungry walls endure.

Thessaly Coldwater, born in 338 AS, is likewise recognized by office: Outrider. No canonical physical features are established for Thessaly Coldwater, and no canonical temperament is established for them. Let no sentry mistake rumor for sight. Where the record gives only the Outrider's station, there the record shall stand. Their duty is to bear warning across broken ground and return, if the road permits, with knowledge fit for those who still defend the realm.

The matter of Vharencrag Fortress is of greater weight. It stands in the High Spires, founded in 84 AS, a core location whose walls remain contested. Its garrison numbers 9,478. That immense host is not proof of safety, as soft-headed recorders claim, but proof of the pressure laid upon the heights. Vharencrag Fortress bears a severe, mountainous identity suited to the crags, and it feels formidable yet threatened. Therefore, every tally made by the Quartermaster and every report carried by the Outrider shall be treated as a nail driven into a door that the enemy has not yet broken.

As for Emberdeep, let no false tenderness obscure its condition. It lies in the Shattered Vale, abandoned and outside the realm's core holdings. Its empty settlement bears the stark character of that vale, and its silence is the silence of a forsaken place. Let it be entered without correction: Emberdeep was founded in 34 AS. The ash remembers even when its houses do not.

Sabelle Blackspire and Thessaly Coldwater shall have their offices honored, their records preserved, and their names spoken without embellishment. Vharencrag Fortress shall be counted as threatened. Emberdeep shall be marked as empty.

By ash, iron, and the last unbroken seal, this decree stands.