

Decree of the Veiled Watch Concerning the Weeping Lurker

Let this notice be read wherever a gate is kept, a storehouse sealed, or a prisoner confined.

The Weeping Lurker is hereby entered upon the watch-roll as a creature of concealed danger. It is a nocturnal ambusher, and its presence is associated with attacks concealed in darkness. Let no sentry mistake its patience for absence. Its danger lies in waiting rather than open pursuit.

Its form is hidden and indistinct. With it comes the unmistakable image of weeping. Those who hear mourning where no mourner stands, or perceive grief without a visible face, shall not approach, call out, or pursue. The Weeping Lurker is mournful, patient, and unnervingly still. Darkness is its cover; delay is its weapon. Watchers shall therefore keep their lamps guarded, their passages observed, and their fear under command.

Maelis Wrenfield, a minor figure of the Ashen Era, serves as a Gaoler. Maelis Wrenfield was born in 393 AS. The register establishes no canonical physical traits or distinctive visual features for Maelis Wrenfield. It establishes no canonical temperament or emotional disposition for Maelis Wrenfield. Accordingly, no report shall describe Maelis Wrenfield by an invented mark, manner, or mood. Records shall use the name and office plainly: Maelis Wrenfield, Gaoler.

Sabelle Blackspire, a minor figure of the Ashen Era, was born in 341 AS and serves as a Quartermaster. No canonical physical features are established for Sabelle Blackspire; her visual identity is limited to her role as a Quartermaster. No canonical temperament is established for Sabelle Blackspire. Let no clerk add a face, bearing, or disposition to her entry. Records shall use the name and office plainly: Sabelle Blackspire, Quartermaster.

No testimony concerning the Weeping Lurker shall be dismissed merely because its body was not seen. No testimony shall be strengthened by giving Maelis Wrenfield or Sabelle Blackspire qualities not entered in the register. Ink is not to become invention merely because the dark invites it.

Those charged with watching, keeping, counting, or recording shall preserve this decree without alteration. Any account of concealed attack shall mark the darkness, the waiting, and the image of weeping, but shall not claim more than was witnessed.

Thus is the watch instructed. Thus is the record guarded.

Issued under sealed authority, and to be obeyed in silence.
