

Muster Roll of the Marshward Leaves and Breach-Dead

Copied into the damp ledger by a hand that has not yet gone numb. Names are entered as heard, though the marsh keeps its own account and is known to correct ours.

	Name	Kind	Service or Designation	Birth	Appearance	Demeanor	Muster Mark
	Isolde Nightbrook	Character	Herbalist	401 AS	No physical features are recorded; her visual identity is associated with the work of an Herbalist.	No temperament is recorded.	Present in the by name and calling.
	Marsh Revenant	Creature	Siege-breaker	—	A corpse-like figure burdened with marsh-wet decay and the grim solidity of a breaker of walls.	Tireless, impersonal hostility; advancing with the inevitability of the dead.	To be marked wherever fortified resistance has failed.

Clerk’s Particulars

Isolde Nightbrook is a minor character. She serves as an Herbalist, and no other office is entered here. Let no fool demand the color of her eyes, the shape of her face, or the manner of her dress, for no physical features are recorded. Those who insist that they have seen her clearly are either lying, fevered, or speaking of the work by which her visual identity is known: the work of an Herbalist.

No temperament is recorded for Isolde Nightbrook. The ledger therefore does not call her gentle, bitter, faithful, fearful, or brave. Such judgments belong to campfire mouths and not to a muster roll. Her birth is entered plainly: 401 AS. The ink has run around it, but the number remains.

The Marsh Revenant is entered under the creatures that break sieges rather than endure them. It is a siege-breaker, defined by its ability to shatter fortified resistance. It is a revenant of stagnant, hostile ground, and its presence turns defense into desperation. This is not ornament in the margin. Walls may stand, gates may hold, and sentries may swear that their courage is sound; the Marsh Revenant makes liars of all three.

Its appearance is recorded as a corpse-like figure burdened with marsh-wet decay and the grim solidity of a breaker of walls. No living standard properly measures it. No weariness is credited to it. Its demeanor is tireless, impersonal hostility, advancing with the inevitability of the dead.

Whether Isolde Nightbrook and the Marsh Revenant have stood beneath the same roof, crossed the same ground, or been entered together by mistake is not recorded. The roll binds them only by ink, and ink is a frail wall. Mark the Herbalist by her calling. Mark the Marsh Revenant by the breach it leaves. Beyond that, the marsh may keep its testimony.
