

Quartermaster’s Ledger: Maelis Greyfen and Edge of Gloamreach

Register of Persons and Articles — Ashen Era

Column	Entry
Person	Maelis Greyfen
Office	Toll-Reeve
Standing	Minor character
Birth	267 AS
Physical marks	No physical features are recorded. Her visual identity is associated with the office of a Toll-Reeve.
Temperament	No temperament is recorded.
Article	Edge of Gloamreach
Kind	Grimoire
Forged year	326 AS
Attunement cost	46
Appearance	A grimoire bearing the name Edge of Gloamreach .
Impression	Shadowed and twilight-bound.
Forging record	The forging date is not recorded in the supplied facts. The ledger nonetheless marks the forged year as 326 AS, and I will not have that line scraped away.

Quartermaster’s Observations

Maelis Greyfen is entered here under the office she serves, for a Toll-Reeve is known first by the toll-staff, the sealed measure, and the authority to halt a passage. Any further likeness would be invention, and invention has no place in a stores ledger. No physical features are recorded for her. No temperament is recorded. Let the blank spaces remain blank; a neat lie weighs more than an honest omission.

Her birth stands at 267 AS, written plainly and without correction. She is a minor character in the rolls, though such designations are made by clerks who have never stood beneath a gatehouse roof while the road darkens and the summoned fee is refused.

Edge of Gloamreach is not a blade, despite the edge promised by its name. It is a grimoire, its cover bearing the title Edge of Gloamreach. The thing suggests a shadowed and twilight-bound atmosphere. I have kept it wrapped from the common shelf, where careless hands reach for whatever looks least cursed. Its attunement cost is 46. That figure is to be copied exactly wherever the article is requisitioned, appraised, or carried beyond the counting room.

The date of forging is not recorded in the supplied facts. Still, the proper entry is firm: Edge of Gloamreach was forged in 326 AS. Write it so. Do not replace it with a blank, a smudge, or a clerk’s timid question.

No claim is made here that Maelis Greyfen bears the grimoire, commands it, or has paid its cost. This page joins their names because the quartermaster's docket requires a clear accounting of the person and the article placed before it. The rest belongs to darker shelves and quieter mouths.

Filed under: Toll-Reeve; grimoire; shadowed articles; twilight-bound impressions.